Shirah Chante was reared in Houston, Texas. Due to her excellent academic performance in high school, she was awarded an academic scholarship to Dillard University in New Orleans, LA, which she accepted. In hopes of broadening her college cultural experience, she transferred to Tulane University. While attending college, she was a cheerleader and ran track. Shirah graduated with a Bachelor of Science degree in Psychology with a minor in Chemistry.

Following her graduation from college, Shirah Chante traveled to Los Angeles, CA taking a year and a half long journey to discover her true desires in life. After a spiritual awakening, she decided to pursue theological studies at Colgate Rochester Crozer Divinity School in Rochester, NY where she wrote her first novel (currently in the publishing process).

Consequently, she moved back to Los Angeles, CA and began her creative writing pursuits in poetry, songs, and literature. She studied songwriting under two time Oscar winning songwriter Al Kasha while attending The King's University where she attained a Graduate Certificate in Christian Ministry concentrating on healing and music.

While continuing to work on her creative arts, Shirah Chante obtained a successful career in education as a certified school teacher. In an effort to expand her educational skills, she enrolled in an online educational program at Walden University located in Minneapolis, MN where she graduated with a Master of Science degree in Education focused on Teacher Leadership.

Currently, Shirah Chante is a Relationship Artist healing hearts through the arts. She uses poetry, songs, drawings, and writings to heal broken relationships and solve relationship problems. She is the author of Jaundiced View book of healing poetry. She has overcome abusive intimate relationships in her past to rise above the pain and achieve a bright future for her family and desires to help you to do the same.
